GRAYLING, MICHIGAN, AUGUST 4, 1921

NUMBER 31

2,500 GUARDS TO ARRIVE FRIDAY

PLAN TO SEND CAVALRY AND ARTILLERY TO OUTSIDE RESERVATIONS ABANDONED.

Michigan's reorganized National guard, officered by men who saw service during the World war, will be in Grayling Friday and begin training in earnest Saturday morning. The encampment will last 15 days. Although the original plan had been to send the artillery to Camp Douglas, Wis., and the cavalry to Camp Grant, Ill., only the infantry and signal corps going to Grayling, the order has been countermanded and the Michigan Guard will follow its custom of before the war and train at a single camp, Grayling.

Two Regiments of Infantry. A complete regiment of infantry, the 126th, has been organized. Most of the units are in the western part of the state, under Commander Colonel Earl R. Stewart, an officer of the M. N. G., who was with the same outfit through the war, advancing to the rank of major. There are also seven companies of what will ultimately be there organized 125th infantry, most of these companies being from Detroit and the neighboring cities.

The 119th field artillery, reorganized at Lansing, with units at Grand Ledge, Charlotte and St. Johns, will be in camp, minus, however its former commander, Colonel Chester B. McCormick, who is now a major in the regular army. There are six batteries of this outfit, three being in Lansing and one each in the neighboring cities.

There will also be a squadron of what will ultimately be the 106th cavalry. This unit is in Detroit. The 132nd signal company, of Ypsilanti, will be in camp, making a total of 2,500 guardsmen to train at Grayling this year.

Regular Army Instructor. For the same reason that the plan for encampment at Douglas and Grant were abandoned lack of regular army units to send to train with the guard, there will be no regular army instructor. The instruction will be given by officers of the Michigan guard who saw service at the front and who were instructors of the national army in France.

LAWN FETE WAS ENJOYABLE EVENT

Nature was kind to the ladies of the Womens club Thursday of last week and gave them fine weather when they were about to present a lawn fete to raise money for their civic fund. This date was missed by rain storms by a margin of a few hours before and after.

The event was a popular one and called forth Grayling society almost unanimously. The beautiful lawns of A. J. Joseph and L. J. Kraus with their fringe of pretty shrubbery made an enchanting setting for the affair. The attractiveness was added to by long strings of Japanese lanterns completely encircling the whole lawn. Two rows of small tables were set along the front and back edges of the lawns, each occupied by four or more people. Along one end were several rows of seats. It is estimated that there were about 200 present.

Temple orchestra, stationed on the Kraus porch, rendered a number of selections before the regular program of the evening. Postmaster Holger F. Peterson announced the numbers on the program as they appeared, which were as follows:

Hawaiian selections—Mrs. Lucile Campbell Custer, Mrs. Roy Milnes, Miss Lucille Hanson and Miss Kathryn Clark. (Ukeles and vocal)

Hawaiian dance—Helen Jane Behlke.

Indian dance—twelve boys. Orchestra selection.

Esthetic dancing—Ella and Margaret Hanson.

Vocal duet—Mrs. Milnes and Mrs. Jarmin.

Daffodil dance—16 girls. Vocal selection—Oliver Mellum, Chicago Grand Opera.

Spanish dance—Miss Charlotte Donaldson, Flint.

Vocal Solo—Mrs. Milnes. Singing and dancing—Helen Bradley, Flint.

Dance—Arlene Pollock, Detroit. (3 years old.)

Song—Helen Bradley.

At intervals during the program pretty girls went about among the assembly taking orders for refreshing drinks, creams, and cakes.

It was a very delightful evening to all who were there. The program was specially good and gave the people a lot of real pleasure and the com-

Last Two Games Played With West Branch and Kalkaska Are Shut-outs.

The local M. C. Base ball team journeyed to West Branch Thursday and returned winners by a score of 12 to 0 in a one sided game of ball. The boys hit the old ball for 21 safeties and each man on the team got two or more slugs at the ball. West Branch had a pitcher from Bay City but he did not fare very well, the boys getting 14 hits and 9 runs off him before he was taken out and Gordon of West Branch replaced him and allowed 7 hits and runs.

"Babe" Laurant, who pitched for Grayling had the opponents at his mercy at all times. They never had a chance to score, only one man being able to get to third base. Besides his pitching record he also got a three base hit with the bases loaded, and the team supported him in fine shape. The boys were used fine by the players and spectators and the game was witnessed by 800 people, it being played the day of the Horse races, arranged by the West Branch Driving Park association. Some of the boys stayed over for the dance and had a fine time.

Sunday's Game—Grayling vs. Kalkaska.

Grayling defeated Kalkaska here Sunday in a loosely played game of ball 11 to 0, being the score. Once more Laurant kept the visitors away from the plate making 25 consecutive innings that he has not allowed a run. The visitors played good ball in the field but were not much at the bat, while the local boys pounded the ball for 14 hits and also stole 9 bases.

One of the feature plays of the game was made by Campbell, the visiting short stop, when he speared one with his bare hand and threw out R. Milnes at first by a step.

Chaney started hurling for the visitors but did not last long and was relieved by Day who did some better, but the locals kept up their wild running around the bases. The locals are trying to get games for next Saturday and Sunday with some Bay City team and the going won't be so easy for the local boys but they will still be out fighting to keep Grayling on the map.

MILITARY HOSPITAL TO BE OPENED FOR CONVALESCENT EX-SERVICE MEN.

Thru the efforts of the Hospital committee of the American Legion, of which Fred Z. Pantlind, of Grand Rapids is the chairman, the hospital at the Hanson State Military reservation will soon be opened and used as a place for convalescent ex-service men.

Workmen are now getting the place in readiness. The upper and lower verandas are being screened in. These are over 8 feet wide and 120 feet along each side and 50 feet across the front and rear of the building.

This is a fine building and is located in a delightful spot, overlooking beautiful Lake Margrethe, which was formerly known as Portage lake until renamed by the Military board complimentary to Mrs. Margrethe Hanson, wife of Rasmus Hanson the donor of the reservation grounds to the National Guard of Michigan. About the hospital is a grove of oak trees. It is the first building one comes to upon entering the massive gateway to the military grounds.

Other buildings near by are the administration building, homes of the caretakers; military warehouses and large, new garage.

Upon entering the edifice one is struck with the beauty of the interior. There are large halls running through the length of each floor. Near the entrance are reception parlors on each side. To the rear of these the halls widen into wards. These are delightfully cheery with high ceilings and large windows that admit plenty of sunshine and brightness. On this floor is also located the spacious dining room.

At the rear of the first floor is the operating room and dispensary, completely equipped with the very latest and best apparatus for use in surgery and treatment of the ill. The second story is very similar to that of the first floor with exception of the operating and dining rooms. There are four bath rooms and lavatories in the building. In the basement are located the laundry, kitchens and heating plant. Water is supplied by a special plant connected with the building, independent from the water system of the reservation, and the water is of the high quality for which this northern country is generally noted.

The beds and furnishings have not as yet been put in place but everything is on hand to make this one of the most comfortable and health giving places any man might wish to go to. There will be fine beds and plenty of comfortable chairs and rockers and lounging places.

This building was constructed at a cost to the State of $50,000. The furnishings involve an expenditure of about $10,000. It is a distance of five miles from Grayling which is reached by rail and by fine gravel highways.

The American Legion is to be congratulated upon acquiring this fine building and this grand location for the use of their disabled and ill comrades.

NOTICE—KEEP AUTOS OUT OF RESERVATION FRIDAY.

The Military department requests that autos do not enter the reservation between noon and 8:00 p. m. Friday, as the highways will be needed for the trucks in hauling supplies from the trains to the camp grounds. Sight-seers will be welcome to the grounds but cars should be parked outside the camp.

Better Cars are now Built NASH Builds Them.

Nash prices are reduced, since July 2.

This conforms to our statement made last October that Nash prices would be maintained until at least July 1, 1921.

The reasons were plain. Until manufacturing costs were lower we could not cut price without cutting value, as Nash prices were not inflated.

We pointed out then that while the average rise in the price of motor cars for a four-year period had been 76% the price of Nash cars had been raised but 31%.

This 31% included the addition of cord tires as standard equipment and many other additions and refinements which added materially to the value of Nash cars.

So we re-affirmed our fixed intention of rigidly upholding the high quality of Nash cars

Since then every effort of the Nash organization has been centered on effecting sound manufacturing economies.

New labor-saving devices were added and production practice so perfected that every process of Nash manufacture is a model of efficiency and economy.

The savings have been substantial. And they demonstrate as nothing else could demonstrate the remarkable Nash ability to produce fine cars at the lowest possible cost.

Even while working production costs downward we were improving Nash cars still further.

Now we can announce a greater Nash value than ever at a reduced purchase price.

At the new prices the leadership of Nash cars is even more emphatically apparent.

"You made the inference perfectly plain," she countered. "I have a reasonable mind, Graham; haven't you discovered it before this?"

The boss nodded soberly. "I have discovered a good many things about you during the past six months: one of them is that there was never another woman like you since the world began."

Knowing, as I did, that she had a husband alive and kicking around somewhere, it seemed as if I just couldn't stay there and listen to what a break of that kind on "the boss" part was likely to lead up to. But Maisie Ann gripped my wrist until she hurt.

"You must listen!" she whispered fiercely. "You're taking care of him, and you've got to know!"

As on many other earlier occasions, Mrs. Sheila slid away from the sentimental side of things just as easy as turning your hand over.

"You are too big a man to let an added difficulty defeat you now," she remarked calmly, going back to the business field. "You are really making a miraculous success. I have just spent two weeks in the capital, as you know, and everybody is talking about you. They say you are in a fair way to solve the big problem—the problem of bringing the railroads and the people together in a peaceable and profitable partnership—which is as it should be."

"It can be done; and I could do it right here on the Pioneer Short Line if I didn't have to fight so many different kinds of devils at the same time," said the boss, scowling down at the fire in the grate. And then with a quick jerk of his head to face her: "You sent the major a wire from the capital last night, telling him to persuade me not to go to Strathcona. Why did you do it? And how did you know I was thinking of going?"

For the first time in the whole six months I saw Mrs. Sheila get a little flustered, though she didn't show it much, only a little more color in her cheeks.

"Some day, perhaps, I may tell you, but I can't now," she said sort of hurriedly. And then: "You mustn't ask me."

"But you did send the wire?"

"Yes."

"And you also sent another to Upton Van Britt?"

"I did."

The boss smiled. "That second message was an afterthought. You were afraid I'd be stubborn and go, anyway. That was some more of your marvelous inner reasoning. Tell me, Sheila, did you know that there was going to be a broken rail-joint set to kill me on that trip?"

That got her in spite of her heavenly calm and I could see her press her pretty lips together hard.

"Was that what they did?" she asked, a bit tremulously.

He nodded. "Van Britt was on the pilot engine ahead of my car, and he found it. There was no harm done. It was bad enough, God knows, to set a trap that would have killed everybody on my train; but this other thing that has been pulled off tonight is even worse. Mr. Danton and his unprincipled followers have set a thing on foot here which is due to grind us all to powder. Just that, they have contrived to handcuff me so that I can't make a move without pulling down consequences of a personal nature upon President Danton, himself."

"Now my 'marvelous inner reasoning' has gone quite blind," she said, with a queer little smile. "You'll have to explain."

"It's simple enough," said the boss shortly. "If Mr. Danton had sent only hired emissaries out here to bribe the members of the legislature—but he didn't; he included a member of his own family."

I was looking straight at Mrs. Sheila as he spoke, and I saw a sudden frightened shock jump into the startled eyes. Just for a second. Before you could count one, it was gone and she was saying quietly:

"A member of his own family? That is very singular, isn't it? Was there—was this thing that was done actually criminal?" she asked, just breathing it at him.

"It was, indeed. The election laws of this state have teeth. It is a penitentiary offense to bribe either the electorate or the lawmakers."

There was silence for a little time, and she was no longer looking at him; she was staring into the heart of the glowing coals in the grate basket. By and by she said: "You haven't told me this man's name—the one who did the bribing; may I know it?"

I knew just what the boss was going to do, and he did it; took the slip of paper that Dedmon had written on from his pocket and passed it across to her. If there was another sheek for her nose of use could see it. She had her face turned away when she looked at the name on the paper. Pretty soon she said, sort of drearily:

"Once you told me that the true test of any human being came when he was asked to eliminate the personal factor; to efface himself completely in order that his cause might prosper. Do you still believe that?"

"Of course. It's all in the day's work. Any cause worth while is vastly bigger than any man who is trying to advance it."

"Then any man, yes; but for a woman, Graham; wouldn't you allow something for the woman?"

"I thought we had agreed long ago that there is no double standard, either in morals or ethics—one thing for the man and another for the woman. That is your own attitude, isn't it?"

She didn't say whether it was or not; she was holding the bit of paper

he had given her so that the light from the fire fell upon it when she said: "I suppose your duty is quite clear. In the slang of the street, you must 'beat Mr. Hatch to it.' You must be the first to denounce this bribery, clearing yourself and letting the ax fall where it will."

The boss was shaking his head a bit doubtfully.

"It isn't quite so simple as that," he objected. "I don't know that I'd have any compunctions about sending Collingwood to the dump. If the half of what they say of him is true, he is a spineless degenerate and hardly worth saving. But to do as you suggest would be open rebellion, you know; while Danton remains president, I am his subordinate, and if I should expose him and his nephew, the situation here would become simply impossible."

"Well?" she prompted.

"Such a move would rightly and properly bring a wire demand for my resignation, of a nature that couldn't be ignored—only it wouldn't, because I should anticipate it by resigning first. That is a small matter, introducing the personal element. But the results to others; to the men of my staff and the rank and file, and to the public, which, as you say, is just beginning to realize some of the benefits of a real partnership with its principal railroad; these things can't be so easily ignored."

"You have thought of some other expedient?"

"No; I haven't got that far yet. But I am determined that Hatch shall not be allowed to work his graft a second time upon the people who are trusting me. I believe in the new policy we are trying out. I'd fling my own fortune into the gap if I had one, and more than that, I'd pull in every friend I have in the world if by so doing I could stand the Pioneer Short Line upon a solid foundation of honest enterprise. That is all that is needed in the present crisis—absolutely all."

He was on his feet now and tramping back and forth on the hearth rug. At one of his back-turnings I saw Mrs. Sheila reach out quickly and lay the bit of paper with its accusing scrawl on the glowing coals. Then she said, quite calm again:

"In time to come you will accomplish even that, Graham—this change of ownership that we have talked of and dreamed about. It is the true solution of the problem; not government ownership, but ownership by the people who have the most at stake—the public and the workers. You are a strong man, and you will bring it about. But this other man—who is not strong; the man whose name was written upon the bit of paper I have just thrown into the fire..."

He wheeled quickly, and what he said made me feel as if a cold wind were blowing up the back of my neck, because I hadn't dreamed that he would remember Collingwood well enough to recognize him in that passing moment on the sidewalk.

"That man," he muttered, sort of gratingly: "I had completely forgotten. He was here just a little while ago. I met him as I was coming in. Did he come to see your cousin—the major?"

"No," she said, matching his low tone: "he came to see me."

"You?"

"Yes. Finding himself in a pitfall which he has dug with his own hands, he is like other men of his kind; he would be very glad to climb out upon the shoulders of a woman."

I guess the boss saw red for a minute, but the question he asked had to come.

"By what right did he come to you, Sheila?"

"By what he doubtless thinks is the best right in the world. He is my husband."

It was out at last, and the boss's poor little house of cards that I knew he had been building all these months had got its knock-down in just those four quietly spoken words. As well as I knew him, I couldn't begin to guess what he would do or say. But he was such a splendid fighter that I might have known.

"He is My Husband."

"I heard, no longer ago than this afternoon, that you were not—that your husband was still living," he said, speaking very gently. "I didn't believe it—not fully—though I saw that there might easily be room for the belief. It makes no difference, Sheila. You are my friend, and you are blameless. But before we go any farther I want you to believe that I wouldn't have been brutal enough to give you that bit of paper if I had remotely suspected that Collingwood was the man."

She didn't make any answer to that, and after a while he said: "Having told me so much, can't you tell me a little more?"

"There isn't much to tell, and even the little is commonplace and—and disgraceful," she replied, with a touch of weariness that was fairly heart-breaking. "Don't ask me why we were married; I can't explain that, simply because I don't know myself. It was arranged between the two families, and I suppose Howie and I always took it for granted. I can't even plead ignorance, for I have known him all my life."

"Go on," said the boss, still speaking as gently as a brother might have. "Howie was a spoiled child, an only son, and he is a spoiled man. I stood it as long as I could—I hope you will believe that. But there are some things that a woman cannot stand, and—"

"I know," he broke in. "So you came out here to be free."

"It is four years since we have lived together," she went on, "and for a long time I hoped he would never find out where I was. There was no divorce. I had taken my mother's name, and only Cousin Basil and his wife knew that I was not what perhaps every one else took me to be—a widow with a dead husband instead of a living one."

"Did Collingwood try to find you?"

"No, I think not. But when he was here last spring with his Uncle Breckenridge he saw me and found out that I was living here with Cousin Basil."

"Did he try to persecute you?"

"No, not then. I was afraid of only one thing: that he might drink too much and—and talk. Part of the fear was realized. He saw me that Sunday night in the Bullard. That was why he was trying to fight the hotel people—because they wouldn't let him come up-stairs. I saw what you did, and I was sorry. I couldn't help feeling that in some way it would prove to be the beginning of a tragedy."

"You saw no more of him then?"

"No; I neither saw him nor heard of him until about a month ago when he came west with a man named Bullock—a New York attorney. I didn't know why he came, but I thought it was to annoy me."

"And he has annoyed you?"

"Until this night he has never missed an opportunity of doing so when he could dodge Cousin Basil. It was his taunting boast yesterday at the capital that led me to telegraph Cousin Basil and Upton Van Britt about your trip to Strathcona. He knew that you were going to the gold camp, and he declared to me that you'd never come back alive."

"But tonight," the boss persisted. "What did he want tonight?"

"He wanted to—use me. He said that he had 'put something across' for his uncle, that he had gotten into trouble for it, and that—to use his own phrase again, you were the man who would try to 'get his goat.'"

"And his object is telling you this?"

"Was entirely worthy of the man. He asked me, or rather I should say, commanded me, to 'choke you off.' And, of course, he added the insult. He said I was the one who could do it."

"Without intending to, you have tied my hands," the boss said gravely. "I wasn't meaning to spare Collingwood if there were any way in which I could use him as a club to knock Hatch out of the game."

"I haven't asked you to spare him."

"No, I know you haven't. But the fact remains that he is your husband."

The interruption was the opening and closing of the front door and the heavy tread of the major in the hall. In a flash Mrs. Sheila was up and getting ready to vanish through the door that led to the dining room. With her hand on the door-knob she shot a quick question at the boss.

"How much will you tell Cousin Basil?"

"Nothing of what you have told me."

"Thank you," she whispered back; "you are as big in your friendship as you are in other ways." And with that she was gone.

It was right along in the same half-minute, while the boss was standing with his back to the fire and the major was going in to talk to him, that I lost Maisie Ann. I don't know where she went, or how. She had let go of my wrist, and when I groped for her she was gone. Since I didn't see any good reason why I should stay and spy upon the boss and the major, I slipped out to the hall and curled up on the big settee beyond the coat rack; curled up, and after listening a while to the drone of voices in the farther room, went to sleep.

It was away deep in the night when the boss took hold of me and shook me awake. The long talk was just getting itself finished, and the major had come to the door with his guest.

"We must manage to pull Collingwood out of it in some way," the major was saying. "I don't love the d—n scoundrel any better than you do, Graham; but that's a reason—a family reason, as you might say. Then he switched off quickly. 'You haven't asked me yet why I ran away from home this evening' when I was expecting you."

"No," said the boss. "Sheila told me that you had a telephone call to the Bullard."

"Yes, sir; and you'd never guess in a thousand years who sent the call, or what was wanted. It was our friend Hatch, and no other. And he had the face to offer me ten thousand dollars a year to act as consulting counsel for him against the railroad company!"

"Of course you accepted," said the boss, meaning just the opposite.

The major chuckled again. "I talked with him long enough to find out about where he stood. He thinks he's got you by the neck, but, like most men of his breed, he's a paltry coward, sir, at heart."

The boss laughed. "What is he afraid of?"

"He is afraid of his life. He told me, with his eyes bugged out, that that was one man head in Portal City who would kill him to get possession of certain papers that were locked up in the cash vault of the Security National."

The boss was pulling on his gloves. "I didn't give him any reason to think that I was anxious to murder him," he said.

"Oh, no, my dear boy; it isn't you, at all. It's Howie Collingwood. That's where we land after all is said and done. Your hands are tied, and we've got this head young maniac to deal with. If Collingwood gets about three fingers of red licker under his belt, why, that's one murder in prospect. And if Hatch has any reason to think that you can still get the underhold on him, why, that's another. I'm glad you've seen fit to take Ripley's advice at last, and got you a bodyguard."

"What's that?" queried the boss.

But the query was answered a minute later when we hit the sidewalk for the tramp back to town and Tarbell fell in to walk three steps behind us all the way to the door of the railroad club.

It sure did look as if things were just about as bad as they could ever be, now. Hatch once more on top, the whole bottom knocked out of the railroad experiment, our good name for political honesty gone glimmering, and, worst of all, perhaps, the boss big heart broken right in two over those four little words that nothing could ever rub out—"he is my husband." I didn't wonder that the boss said never a word in all that long walk down-town, or that he forgot to tell me good-night when he locked himself up in his room at the club.

CHAPTER XV

The Dipomania

In a day when bunched money, however arrogant it may be, has been taught to go sort of softly, the Hatch people were careful not to make any public announcement of the things they were doing or going to do. But bad news has wings of its own. Mr. Norcross was still in the midst of his mail dictation to me the morning after the bottom—all the different bottoms—fell out, when Mr. Hornack came bustling in.

"What's all this fire-alarm that's been sprung about a new elevator trust?" he demanded, chewing on his cigar as if it were something he were trying to eat. "It's all over town that C. S. & W. has been secretly reorganized, with the Hatch crowd in control. I'm having a perfect cyclone of telephone calls asking what, and how, and why."

The boss's reply ignored the details. "We're in for it again," he announced briefly. "The local companies couldn't hold on to a good thing when they had it. The stock has been swept up, first into little heaps, and then into big ones, and now the Hatch people have forced a practical consolidation."

"Is that the fact?—or only the way you are doping it out?" queried the traffic manager.

"It is the fact. Hatch came here last night to tell me about it; also, to tell me where we were to get off."

Hornack bit off a piece of the chewed cigar and took a fresh hold on it.

"Does he think for one holy half minute that we're going to sit down quietly and let him undo all the good work that's been done?" he rasped.

"He does—just that. He's putting us in the nine-hole, Hornack, and up to the present moment I haven't found the way to climb out of it."

"But the ground leases?" Hornack began. "Why can't we pull them on him?"

"We might, if we hadn't been shot dead in our tracks by the very men who ought to be backing us to win," said the boss soberly. And then he went on to tell about the new grip Hatch had on us.

Of course, Hornack blew up at that, and what he said wasn't for publication. For a minute or so the air of the office was blue. When he got down to common, ordinary English again he was saying, between curses: "But you can't let it stand at that, Norcross; you simply can't!"

"I don't intend to," was the even-tempered rejoinder. "But anything we can do will always lack the element of finality, Hornack, while Wall Street owns us. I've said it a hundred times and I'll say it again: the only hope for the public service corporation today lies in a distribution of its securities among the people it actually serves."

Hornack's teeth met in the middle of the chewed cigar.

"That's excellent logic—bully good logic, if anybody should ask you! But we're fighting a condition, not a theory. Nobody wants P. S. L. Common even at thirty-two. You wouldn't advise your worst enemy to buy it at that figure."

"I don't know," said the boss, kind of mutely. "You're forgetting the water that's been put into it from time to time by the speculators and reorganizers; there has been a good deal of that, first and last. Nevertheless, value for value, you know, and I know that the property is worth more than thirty-two, including the bonds. What I mean is that if anybody would buy the control at that figure—the control, mind you, and not merely a minority—and handle the road purely as a dividend-earning business proposition, he wouldn't lose money; he'd make money—a lot of it."

"All of which doesn't get us anywhere in the present pinch," I returned the traffic manager. "I suppose we'll have to wait until Hatch makes his first move, and I've still got fight enough left in me to hope that he'll make it suddenly. Punch the button for me if anything new develops. I'm going back to swing on to my telephone."

Following this talk with Hornack there was a try-out with Billoughby and Juneburn, but as this three-cornered conference was held in the private room of the suite, I don't know what was said. A little farther along, when the boss was once more whitening at the dictation, Mr. Van Britt stroled in. Mr. Norcross told me to take my bunch of notes to May and then he gave Mr. Van Britt his inning, starting off with: "Well, how is the general superintendent this fine morning?"

"A General Strike of All C. S. & W. Employees Will Go On at Noon Tomorrow."

Mr. Van Britt wrinkled his nose. "The general superintendent is wondering, one more time, why under the stars heavens he is out here in this country that God has forgotten, scrapping for a living on this one-horse railroad of yours when he might be in good little old New York, living easy and clipping coupons in the safety-deposit room of a Broad street bank."

The boss laughed at that, and I'm telling you right now that I was glad to know that he was still able to laugh.

"You've never seen the day when you wanted to renege, Upton, and you know it," he hit back. "Think of the perfectly good technical education you were wasting when I took hold of you and jerked you out here."

"Huh!" said our millionaire. "I've just had two engineers on the carpet for running over an old ranchman's pet cow. They said they couldn't help it; but I told them that under the 'public-be-pleased' policy, they'd got to help it."

The boss chuckled. "I believe you'd joke at your own funeral, Upton. You didn't come here to tell me about the ranchman's pet cow."

"Not exactly. I came to tell you that Citizens' Storage & Warehouse is due to have a strike on its hands. The management—which seems to have got itself consolidated in some way—shot out a lot of new bosses all along the line on the through train last night, and this morning the entire works, elevators, packeries, coal yards, lumber mills, and everything, are posted with notices of a blanket cut in wages; twenty per cent, flat, for everybody. The news has been trickling in over the wires all morning; and the last word is that a general strike of all C. S. & W. employees will go on at noon tomorrow."

"That is move number one," said the boss. And then: "You have heard that the Hatch people have reached out and taken in the C. S. & W.?"

"Hornack was telling me something about it; yes."

"It is true; and the fight is on. You see what Hatch is doing. At one stroke he gets rid of all the local employees of C. S. & W., who have been drawing good pay and who might make trouble for him a little later, and fills their places with strike-breakers who have no local sympathizers."

"But there will be another result which he may not have counted upon," Mr. Van Britt put in. "The blanket cut serves notice upon everybody that once more the old strong-arm monopoly is in the saddle. The newspapers will tell us about it tomorrow morning. Also, a good many of them will be asking us what we are going to do about it; whether we are going to fight the new monopoly as we did the old, or stand in with the graft, as our predecessors did."

"We needn't go over that ground again—you and I, Upton," said Mr. Norcross. "You know where I stand. But the conditions have changed. We have been knifed in the back. And with that he gave the stocky little operating chief a crisp outline of the new situation precipitated by the Danton-Collingwood political bribery.

Mr. Van Britt took it quietly, as he did most things, sitting with his hands in his pockets and smiling blandly where Hornack had exploded in wrathful profanity. At the wind-up he said: "Old Uncle Breckenridge is one too many for you, Graham. You can't stand the graft—this new graft of Hatch's; and neither can you go before the people as the accuser of your president—and hope to hold your job. The one thing for you to do is to lock up your office and walk out."

"Upton, if I thought you meant that—but I never know when to take you seriously."

"The two engineers who ran over the ranchman's pet cow had no such difficulty, I assure you. And isn't it good advice? You know, as well as I do, that Chadwick is holding you here by main strength; that you can never accomplish anything permanent while Danton and his cronies are at the steering-wheel. It might be different if you had the local backing of your constituency—the people served by the Short Line. But you haven't that; up to date, the people are merely interested spectators."

"Go on," said the boss, frowning again.

"They have a stake in the game—the biggest of the stakes, as a matter of fact—but it isn't sufficiently apparent to make them climb in and fight for you. They are saying, with a good bit of reason, that, after all is said and done, Big Money—Wall Street—still has the call, and any twenty-four hours may see the whole thing slump back into graft and crooked politics."

"It is so true that you might be reading it out of a book," was the boss's comment. And then: "What's the answer?"

Mr. Van Britt shook his head. "I don't know. If you had money enough to buy the voting control in P. S. L., you might get somewhere; but as it is, you're like a cat in Hades without claws."

"Tell me," said Mr. Norcross, after a little pause: "You're a native New Yorker; do you know this man Collingwood?"

"Only by hearsay. He is what our English friends call a 'blooming bouncer'—fast yachts, fast motor-cars, the fast set generally. It's a pretty bad case of money-spill, I fancy. They say he wasn't always a total loss."

"Did you ever hear that he was married?"

"Oh, yes; he married a Kentucky girl some years ago; I don't remember her name. They say she stood him for about six months and then dropped out. I suppose he needs killing for that."

At this the boss went a step farther, saying: "He does, indeed, Upton. I happen to know the young woman."

That was when Mr. Van Britt fired his own little bomb-shell. "So do I," he answered quietly.

ORIGINAL HORSE HAD CLAWS

Skeletons of Prehistoric Animals Show That Nature Gave Them Some What Strange Equipment.

Seventeen skeletons of the so-called "Clawed Horse" of prehistoric times from the Agate Spring fossil quarry of western Nebraska have been placed in storage, for lack of exhibiting space, at the American museum of natural history, New York.

The varied skeletal combinations of Moropus and deductions therefrom are described by Professors Osborn and Matthew, as follows:

"The Moropus was a distant relative of the rhinoceros, the tapir, and the horse. It is about the size of a rhinoceros but very different in form; the head and neck are like those of the horse. The rounded back resembles that of a tapir, and the legs, although massive like those of the rhinoceros, are much longer. The teeth and feet are very distinctive. The teeth show that the animal browsed on vegetation."

"Moropus belongs to the rhinoceros, tapirs and horses to the order Perissodactyla, or hoofed mammals with an odd number of toes on the hind foot. The rhinoceros, camels, pigs and hippopotamuses have an even number of toes either two or four. Moropus has three toes. The feet with their great claws are more like those of ant eaters and similar digging mammals than of any of the hoofed mammals to which Moropus really belongs. It is suggested that the claws were designed to aid in scraping away the sand in dry river beds or other suitable places to obtain drink."

His Collection.

There is a curious game played by educators, which consists in sending questionnaires to some hundreds, or some thousands, of school children, and tabulating their replies for the enlightenment of the general public. The precise purport of this game has never been defined, but its popularity impels us to envy the leisure that educators seem to enjoy. A few years ago 1,214 little Californians were asked if they made collections of any kind, and if so, what did they collect? The answers were such as might have been expected, with one exception. A small and innocently ironic boy wrote that he collected "bits of advice." His board was the only one that provoked curiosity.—Agnes Repplier, in Atlantic Monthly.

Unhappy Ant Queen Is Bored.

Like hens, most species of ants have a queen, and, not unlike human queens, she leads an existence that is not always happy. She is surrounded by courtiers, who, on the surface, are her humble slaves, and not only feed her, but act as her escort wherever she goes. But let the queen take it into her head to go somewhere else than the spot picked by the workers, and she soon finds out that the state is greater than the individual. The circle of courtiers that surround her step briskly up and give her sharp bites until she agrees to their wishes and takes the path they have planned.

HOW WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

May Escape the Dreaded Sufferings of that Period by Taking Mrs. Block's Advice

Hopkins, Minn.—"During Change of Life I had hot flashes and suffered for two years. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised in the paper and got good results from taking it. I recommend your medicine to my friends and you may publish this fact as a testimonial."—Mrs. ROBERT BLOCK, Box 642, Hopkins, Minn.

It has been said that not one woman in a thousand passes this perfectly natural change without experiencing a train of very annoying and sometimes painful symptoms. Those dreadful hot flashes, sinking spells, spots before the eyes, dizzy spells, nervousness, are only a few of the symptoms. Every woman at this age should profit by Mrs. Block's experience and try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., about your health. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

WHY DRUGGISTS RECOMMEND SWAMP-ROOT

For many years druggists have watched with much interest the remarkable record maintained by Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder medicine.

It is a physician's prescription. Swamp-Root is a strengthening medicine. It helps the kidneys, liver and bladder do the work nature intended they should do.

Swamp-Root has stood the test of years. It is sold by all druggists on its merit and it should help you. No other kidney medicine has so many friends.

Be sure to get Swamp-Root and start treatment at once.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Poughkeepsie, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.

Has the Manner. "You discharged your office boy?" "Yes," said Dr. Duwaine. "He never did anything but stand around and look wise."

"I guess you've seen the last of him."

"I don't know about that. He may turn up here some day as an efficiency expert."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

KREMOLA

Oman and Its People

Native Women of Oman.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

But a step from lands first and longest known in the history of the world—Egypt, Babylon, Palestine—Arabia remains one of the world's most unknown regions. And in one of its least known corners is the independent state of Oman. Historically, politically and geographically, Oman has always been isolated from the rest of Arabia. Ever since the days of the caliphate, so far as communication with other Arabs is concerned, Oman was practically an island, with a sea of water on two sides and a sea of sand—the great Arabian desert—on the other. As a result, the people are even more primitive in their habits than the Arabs generally; and only recently have other towns than Muscat, the capital, opened their eyes to the world.

Oman is a relatively narrow strip of coast, bowed around the irregular eastern tip of Arabia. To the northwest it extends half way along the southern shore of the Persian gulf, into the head of which empty the historic Tigris and Euphrates rivers. From there it extends in a crooked, unbroken strip of varying width for nearly 1,000 miles, its southwestern extremity reaching almost to the mid point of the haring south shore of the Arabian peninsula.

The state has an area of 82,000 square miles, almost twice that of Pennsylvania. Although generally accepted statistics place the population at 800,000, Colonel Miles, who has seen more of the interior than any other recent traveler, estimates it at over 1,000,000. The capital, Muscat, and the adjoining town of Mutrah, have together about 25,000 inhabitants. The ancient capital, Bostak, which is inland, declined in importance after the Portuguese, during the remarkable growth of their colonial power in the sixteenth century, pushed around the Cape of Good Hope and northward and eastward, occupying Muscat. The Portuguese remained in possession of this metropolis of Oman from 1508 until the middle of the seventeenth century.

Was Almost an Empire. The conquerors of Oman who gave it its present ruling family came from Yemen on the other side of Arabia. Ahmed bin Sa'eed, the leader, captured Muscat in 1741. The present sultan and imam, who came to the throne in 1913, is a descendant of this eighteenth century conqueror.

At the beginning of the nineteenth century, before European powers had determined upon the almost complete parceling out of Africa, Oman was almost an empire. It extended over a large part of Arabia, the islands to the north of Arabia in the Persian gulf, a strip of the southern coast of Persia, and a strip of the Indian ocean coast of Africa from the north-eastern point near the entrance to the Red sea almost half way to the Cape of Good Hope. This African territory, including Zanzibar, comprised large parts of what later became Italian Somaliland, British East Africa and German East Africa. It also included the important island of Socotra at the mouth of the Gulf of Aden, now under British control.

At that time the slave trade was flourishing, and it was the Arabs of Oman who explored the great interior of Africa long before the days of Speke and Livingstone. On the death in 1856 of Oman's "Alexander," the Sultan Sa'eed, the empire began to break up, one son becoming sultan of Zanzibar and another sultan of the Arabian territory. Subsequently all Asiatic possessions outside Arabia were lost, except a few islands in the Persian gulf. About this time Oman came under the virtual protection of Great Britain through the Indian government, and a British consul and political agent has since been maintained at Muscat.

STRAIGHT LINES NOW FEATURE CLOTHES FOR STREET WEAR

A LONG with new suits for fall, come the new cloth dresses, the one-piece daytime frocks that have made a secure place for themselves among street clothes. They employ the same fabrics as suits do—the same sort of decoration and finish—with more latitude in the matter of trimming—and have become a necessity in the wardrobe. They have an advantage because they are worn without a coat for early fall and under heavy wraps for midwinter.

The new arrivals in street dresses disclose designers to be of one mind, at least in the matter of the straight-line silhouette. They have developed their ideas in many ways, but the foundation of the styles lies upon the straight-line figure, even when plaits are employed in the skirts. Some of these dresses have the effect of skirts set on to bodices, under narrow strap belts, placed at a low waist line; but this belt does not break the line from shoulder to hem. Bell sleeves, elbow or three-quarter length appear to have captured the fancy of their makers—

SMART STYLE IN KNITTED THINGS FOR FALL WEAR

STYLES have become so important in knitted things for outerwear that garments are named after them—as "tuxedos," "slip-overs," "tie-backs," and so on, rather than by more revealing terms. In wool, silk and other silk manufacturers have made smart things for outer wear that deserved to be named and are. The sweater-coat has become the "tuxedo," our old favorite the surplice waist is now a "tie-back," and the sweater pure and simple almost is no more—the "middy"—with various descriptive words preceding this title, the tuxedo and the semi-tuxedo have replaced it, aided by new sweater-blouses.

This movement to emphasize style has resulted in the most attractive outer wear for fall that has ever been presented by the knitting mills. These knitted things are for everyone—young or old—but they fit the youth of school girls and young women at college as surely as smooth checks and sparkling eyes. Worsted middies in white with collars in navy or cadet blue or jockey red are turned up about the bottom, with flat pearl buttons calling attention to the fact, and made with elbow-length sleeves also provided with turned-up cuffs. As sure as fate someone will invent a knitted hat to complete this snappy affair for fall.

A plain tuxedo is shown above. Full length revers and cuffs are provided by knitting the yarn in a different stitch and there is a detachable knitted sash finished with small tassels.

Furs in Summer. The rise in the thermometer is no indication of a fall in the demand for fur neckpieces. Chokers still are worn, with the longer haired furs gaining favor. Fox and the furs of the larger furbearing animals are special favorites.

The Bracelet Fad. Fashion observers just back from London report that the latest idea in bracelet fashions is to confine them all to one arm, leaving the other empty.

Pond Lilies. Pond lilies are the effective trimming of some of the newest sport hats.

One of the most original variations of the scheme was worn by a woman whose left arm was covered from shoulder to wrist at intervals of about an inch by bead bracelets of the same color as her frock, each about half an inch wide. The foundation was of elastic to keep the bracelets in place.

In the olden days there lived in the vicinity of Shelby a sheepherder named Bill. Bill, like most members of his profession, was wont to work faithfully for the greater part of the year and then blow into town and waste his substance in a short period of riotous living. Returning from one of those trips broke, his employer asked him:

"Bill, you left here with $400. What became of it?"

"Bill studied for a minute and replied: "Waah, I reckon I lost about a hundred an fifty in a stud game. I must a left 'bout a hundred at the Fashion Dance hall, an' I reckon I spent close to a hundred for booze."

"What did you do with the other fifty?" persisted his boss.

"Can't remember exactly," replied Bill after due reflection. "I guess I must of just naturally fooled that away."—Irrigation News.

HAVE NEED OF MUCH FOOD

Voracious Appetites of Growing Boys Are Natural and Not to Be Wondered At.

Dr. E. F. Du Bois made extensive studies a few years ago on the food requirements of growing boys, and found that they needed about 25 per cent more than grown men, weight for weight. Now Drs. F. G. Benedict and Mary F. Hendry have made similar studies on girls between twelve and seventeen years of age. These correspond in their results with those made by Dr. Du Bois.

The Journal of the American Medical Association comments that, considered in connection with the usually lively muscular activities of children, which call for liberal expenditure of energy, the facts ascertained explain and justify the large appetites of growing boys.

Riley Got $500 a Word. Hears of the late James Whitcomb Riley, the Indiana poet, find that he got $500 a word royalties on his love poem, "An Old Sweetheart of Mine."

This is said to be the most profitable piece of writing per word on record. Stevenson sold "Treasure Island" to a newspaper for $3 a column. "Paradise Lost" brought Milton only $25. Times have changed, thanks to the printing press and business system which literary genius used to hold in contempt.

YET MOTHER WASN'T PLEASED

Little Son's Suggestion Certainly Helpful, but for Some Reason Not Comforting.

A Columbus mother of a five-year-old son is also the unwilling possessor of two corns, both on one toe. Yesterday the corns were unusually painful.

"It wouldn't be so terrible if it were only one corn," she moaned, "but two! And both on one toe. It is the limit."

The little son listened with deep distress. He gazed at the pointed shoe and at the mother's frowning face, seemingly in deep and painful meditation. Suddenly his face brightened. "Say, mother," he exclaimed, "corns grow, don't they?"

"Why, yes," replied the mother. "Mine get bigger every day, but what of it?"

"Well," he replied hopefully, "the corns will soon grow into one and then it won't be nearly so bad, will it?"—Indianapolis News.

Found Profit in Twins. Sometimes it is just a little hard for the father with the three other children to feel joyful when a set of twins arrive. But the janitor of the apartment house on the West side who received two small pickaninnies, duplicates in appearance, was tickled to death.

"I calls 'em Peter an' Paul," he said, with a wide grin. "When I takes 'em out ridin' in the perambulator nearly all the ladies exclaim about how cute they is. An every day someone gives 'em a quarter or half a dollar. These here boys pay for their board, and then some."

GRAYLING, THURSDAY, AUG. 4.

WILL OUR FARMERS TAKE AD-VANTAGE OF OPPORTUNITY TO IMPROVE THEIR DAIRY STOCK?

It seems to be the opinion of many of our farmers and other citizens as well that agriculture in Crawford county will develop quickest by the furthering of the dairy interests. If that is true, and we honestly believe it is, then the opportunity offered by the M. A. C. and the Michigan Central railroad company, jointly, to furnish pure bred sires at a minimum of cost to the farmer, should be grasped and as many as possible of these thoroughbreds be placed on our farms.

This is a movement that is purely unselfish and one with the object of aiding in the development of this northern country. The day of the scrub sire is past and we believe that the time is fast coming when none but purebred cattle will be found anywhere on the farms of our most progressive agriculturists. The theory of thoroughbred cattle is not an experiment so far as economy is concerned. It is proven without question that thoroughbred dairy stock bring a much larger percentage of profit to the farmer than do scrub cattle. They are better milk producers, give a greater percentage of butter fats and because of the better general health of such cattle they require less nourishment to keep them, and are thus less expensive to maintain. Also such cattle bring better prices in sales.

It seems to us that here is a liberal offer and a golden opportunity for every farmer who pretends to maintain any kind of a dairy. Let every community see to it that it is provided with sires of this class. It will improve the stock and within a few years we will have just as good dairies in Crawford county as there are in any other county in Michigan.

The sires that are being offered are purebred Holstein-Friesian, well-known as great milk producers. A herd of such cattle on a farm should produce probably 50% more milk than will grade or scrub cattle. Let us profit by the experience of thousands of farmers who have demonstrated the advantage of such quality of cattle by actual tests and have found them the BEST breeds to own, producing greatly more milk and butter fat per animal than any of the inferior kinds.

The Better-Sire train, as it is called will arrive in Roscommon at 2:00 p. m. Monday, Aug. 8 and remain until 4:00 p. m. This will afford the farmers of South Branch and Beaver Creek townships an opportunity to visit the exhibit at that place as it will be more easily reached than at Grayling. Of course this does not prevent any coming to Grayling if they can do so. The train will leave for Grayling at 4:00 p. m. where an evening session will be held. There will be lectures, moving pictures and many other things of interest to ladies as well as men, both from the city and the farms. The next morning there will be an exhibit beginning at 7:00 o'clock and lasting until 9:00. This will be the only stop in Crawford county. The farmers of the northern part of the county as well as of Grayling township should make every effort to be present at these meetings—either in the morning or both.

We hope to see a big crowd present, and trust when the train pulls out of Crawford county a number of fine purebred Holstein-Friesian sires will be left behind.

The easy manner in which these animals may be procured is fully explained in the column edited by our county agricultural agent—R. D. Bailey, which may be found in another column in this issue of the Avalanche.

Announcing
The New Buick "Four"

A Thoroughbred Four, Completing the Famed Buick
Line

The new Four-Cylinder Buick, here announced, is a thoroughbred—a pedigreed car well worthy of its name.

Down to the very last detail, this new model possesses every quality of enduring serviceability, complete comfort, and distinctive appearance that have always characterized Buick automobiles.

The advent of this new Four makes the Buick 1922 line complete. It offers to purchasers of a car of this size all the quality and service that go to make up the name "Buick."

The Buick Valve-
in-Head Engine
A Power Plant
That Has Proved
Itself—

The engine, of course, is of the time-tested Buick Valve-in-Head type. The year-after-year concentration of Buick's engineering skill and experience in building Valve-in-Head motors assures the highest standard of performance obtainable today.

Every other unit is of a quality equal to the power plant. The whole assembly constitutes a perfectly balanced chassis which is of typical Buick construction. The equipment of Cord Tires is merely evidence of the quality which characterizes the entire car.

Two open and two closed body types mounted on the Buick built chassis comprise the new series.

Even the most casual inspection of the details of design and workmanship will reveal that full measure of quality which motorists have learned to associate with Buick.

Obviously a high grade automobile—a genuine Buick production—the prices listed below make this great Four even greater. A value such as this is possible only because of the combination of Buick engineering skill devoted to the one ideal of quality, Buick production facilities developed over nearly a quarter of a century, and Buick's nation-wide distribution and service organization.

The Buick Motor Company is proud of the Buick Four. It has the faith of long experience in this newest addition to its line. It places upon it unreservedly the Buick guarantee carried by every Buick automobile produced. That its confidence is well placed is manifested not only by the keen interest with which motorists have awaited this announcement, but also the advance orders placed by distributors, dealers, and the general public.

CONDENSED CLASSICS

THE MYSTERIES OF PARIS

By EUGENE SUE

Condensation by Miss Sara Ware Bassett

The first of the works of Eugene Sue, one must not forget to take into consideration the epoch at which they were written in world literature.

When Sue was born the novel was still a comparatively new product. There had, it is true, been books before its advent, for the invention of printing had put reading matter within the reach of the people; but until fiction made its appearance most of the material published had been of a religious trend, consisting of lives of the saints, and treatises on theology and science. Even then such volumes were costly, to say nothing of their being far too ponderous a nature to answer the cravings of a public scantily educated and desirous for entertainment at a time when amusements were few.

Therefore, when out of this arid literary waste the novel sprung into being, we can easily picture the eagerness with which the hungry masses fell upon it. Here, at last, was something human and within the scope of the "every-day man's understanding"; here, in fascinating form, were presented not only with the characters from the life with which he was familiar, but also adventures in those regions of romance that he had imagined. It was like water to the thirsty!

Hence, if when reading the very early novels, or even those of the later decades to which Sue belonged, we are conscious of stilted dialogue and melodramatic and improbable situations, let us remember that the writers of this era were to no small extent pioneers in a sparsely trodden wilderness of art; and that when "the world was so new and all" in literary development it is a marvel that their handiwork has endured for so many years. Sue's "Mysteries of Paris," penned in 1842, seems touched with the fires of everlasting youth. Indeed, it must possess the charm of universal appeal if it would never have held its place for almost a century. When we consider how few of our present-day novels survive a second season, we are forced to doff our caps to this artist of the past, who, like Stevenson, so well merits the sobriquet of "Tusitatus, a Teller of Tales," and the secret of whose spell lies in the eternal child in us answering to the sorceries of a master storyteller.

The book in question is a tale of exciting and dramatic happenings, which, cleverly woven together, embody the author's unique philosophy that the quest for good may be made quite as selective a crusade as the quest for evil; the only difference lying in the goal toward which one turns his steps. Certainly the story leaves out this theory, for we are swept along by the magician's cunning pace after pace, chapter after chapter, until his creative resources seem limitless. Never for an instant does our interest lag. When the book is finished we feel that had Sue so ordered he could have evolved just as many more plots with an equal degree of ease.

He opens his narrative with a scene in the slums of Paris, where Fleur-de-Marie, a beautiful girl of the streets, is being viciously attacked by the Shasher, a brute of the underworld. A trivial quarrel between the two has arisen and the man is about to strike this helpless creature when suddenly a stranger intervenes, and by superior strength and wit lays low the assailant. The newcomer is a M. Rudolph, who styles himself a painter of fairs. Although poorly garbed and speaking the jargon of the pavements, we speedily realize that he is something other than he presents, and in this supposition we are soon justified, for presently we learn that in truth M. Rudolph is no other personage than his royal highness, the grand duke of Gerolstein in disguise. The Shasher, however, does not know this, and neither does his pretty companion, and we soon find the three engaged in a struggle at a cafe table, resulting, for the mother's argument, the stories of their past lives.

Rudolph has little to say. He is an artist, he declares. The Shasher frankly admits himself to be an escaped convict who has served in the galleys for murder; but with the inconsistency of human nature he announces that while he has no scruples against murder, he will not steal. Fleur-de-Marie, or Gombouse as her comrades term her, is a sixteen-year-old waif who has never known any parent save Screech Owl, a cruel woman from whom she fled when a child, nor has she had any home save prison walls and the haunts of vice. Nevertheless, despite her vile surroundings, she has kept her soul untainted and is essentially pure of heart, being the victim of environment and circumstances rather than its votary.

Observing this, Rudolph, whose aim is ever to give another chance to those in whom good is apparent, transplants her to a home in the country, where, under the care of Mrs. George, his old nurse, she may grow up in a wholesome atmosphere. At the same time he binds the Shasher to him for life by offering him his hand with the remark that the convict has honor and a heart.

Here our story begins.

Rudolph, we soon learn, has two aims in venturing incognito into the fifth of Paris. The first is to discover, if he can, the whereabouts of Mrs. George's son, Gerolstein, who has been taken from her in his youth by a vicious husband. The second is to trace, if possible, his lost daughter, who is supposed to have died in infancy. It is around these two themes that the romance moves. In pursuing them M. Rudolph is beset by every imaginable adventure. He is locked up in a subterranean cellar, where the waters of the Seine slowly creep up to his neck, and from which predicament the faithful Shasher rescues him.

Immense traps are laid for his feet; but from each successive snare he miraculously escapes. And throughout this series of entanglements he never abandons his premise that no matter how depraved the individual, there is potential good in all humanity, which, if nurtured, will blossom into virtue. In consequence he becomes a sort of "Inferior Providence" to those whom he meets. He saves the blameless debtor from prison, and places an honest livelihood within his reach. He does a thousand kindnesses. On the other hand he does not hesitate to bring the unworthy to justice. Relentlessly he causes the eyes of a wretch who has been pitiless to the weak to be put out, that he may know what it means to be helpless and the prey of the strong.

The story is a network of crimes and their eventual punishment, and everywhere triumphant we find the crowd that in the breast of humankind jumps a spark of the Divine.

The portion of the tale dealing with the kidnapping of Fleur-de-Marie from her home with Mrs. George by Screech Owl, the blind schoolmaster, and the imp Horpy is a novel in itself. How these wretches wait for the innocent girl; convey her to Paris by coach; and thrust her into the arms of the police, who in turn deposit her in prison is exciting reading. From prison she is released by a written order, only to fall a victim to a band of hired ruffians who try to drown her in the river, one of her old comrades from Saint Lazare leaps in and saves her life. Next we see her in the great Paris hospital, and it is at this juncture that Grand Duke Rudolph of Gerolstein obtains trace of her; discovers that she is his own daughter; and bears her in triumph to his magnificent palace to be transformed from a fugitive of the streets to her Royal Highness Princess Amelia. Here, for a brief period, we behold our little Fleur-de-Marie the idol of the court, and sought in marriage by a prince of the realm.

But the stigma of the past is ever fresh in the girl's mind. She cannot shake it off. Though she adores her lover, she refuses to wed him, saying that she "loves him too much to give him a hand that has been touched by the ruffians of the city." Poor, brave Fleur-de-Marie! She at last seeks peace in a convent; and when she has there, we have to regret that her blameless but troubled life is ended.

In the meantime what of Gerolstein? We search for him through an equally ingenious train of happenings. With all M. Rudolph's wealth and astuteness it is no easy task to find this missing boy who is lost in the great city of Paris. But he is found. Like Gombouse, the young hero has kept his soul unspiced by evil. Urged to rob his employer, he has not only refused, but has given information against those who plotted the crime, that they might be brought to justice. As a result of this good deed, however, he has been humiliated from one end of Paris to the other. At last he falls a victim to a monster of crime, Jacques Ferrand, a corrupt notary, who casts him into prison on a fictitious charge. He is no favorite, for by scoring to mingle with the vicious creatures about him he incurs their wrath and suspicion, until at length they dub him a spy and resolve to murder him. From this fate he is saved by Shasher, who appears in the prison just in time to fill his assailants and pilot him to liberty. Eventually he is restored to his mother's arms and to his pretty sweetheart, Rigolette, whom he now marries.

The skill with which Sue constructs his story, introducing character after character, and bringing these varied elements into a unified whole, is a marvel of artistry. It is also interesting to note that the novel is the author's knowledge of modern medicine, his handling of drugs, his portrayal of hospital practices, and other technical touches relative to his profession. Whenever such data can be turned to use he does not hesitate to employ it, fearlessly setting forth in black and white specific evils of the day that should be righted. Nor does he shrink from proclaiming to France, as did Dickens to England, the defects of the legal and penal systems of his country.

A voice so boldly expressed at a time when injustices were many must have won a hearing, and we honor Eugene Sue not alone as a pioneer in the novel-writing field, but also as a prince of story-tellers, but as a reformer of the social and political evils of his generation.

RELIGION'S PART IN BIG WAR

Senior Chaplain Found That 99 per Cent of Fighters Were Men of Some Faith.

To those despoiling souls who publicly lament that the average American has lost what little religion he possessed during the trying days of 1917-18, Rev. Henry Russell Talbot, D. D., canon of the National Cathedral at Washington, D. C., makes answer. As senior chaplain of the combatting First Division, A. E. F., in the Argonne fighting, Dr. Talbot viewed a cross section of the country's manhood and found a religion that will puzzle and amaze the orthodox church-goer.

In his work, Dr. Talbot collected and examined the personal effects of men killed in battle. In ninety percent of them he found either a Bible, a scripture, a prayer book, a cross, a crucifix or some other token which he says in a letter to national headquarters of the American Legion, proved that religion was a real element in the lives of men. And in these days, the former chaplain continues, the First was not carrying a single article that did not consider essential.

Admitting that the average American is "uncommonly timid in the exercise of his religion," Dr. Talbot declares that "nevertheless it is those and needs only to be cultivated and intelligently used." He summarizes his refutation of the assertion that the American soldier was an irreligious person by the statement: "If a simplicity which is elemental; a trust which is childlike although it expresses itself in what is called 'chance' or 'luck'; a sense of reverence which is so profound that it is never fooled by cant; an honesty which, while it is apt to be committal, is so essential that shams don't last—if these are notes of religion, there was in the spiritual life of the Expeditionary Force something that was fine."

DAN CUPID WAS ON THE JOB

Nebraska Legion Man Won Bride From Home When They Met in France.

They met in France. He was a soldier, she a caution worker. The romance culminated as only a romance could—culminated in the marriage recently of Frank B. O'Connell, detachment adjutant of the American Legion of Nebraska, and Miss Rachel N. Hodge, at St. Albans, N. H. The wedding was at St. Albans and the bride and groom were accompanied by a large party.

O'Connell, during the summer of 1918, served at Le Mans, where he edited a soldier newspaper. Miss Hodge was stationed there as a member of the Y. M. C. A. They had known each other for some time, but not seriously. They met at St. Albans, N. H. on their return from France. O'Connell had been active in Legion work. He was the first commander of the Lincoln post and has been adjutant of the department since its organization. He is widely known among the Legionnaires.

THE U. S. NOBBY TREAD

Where the going is specially heavy with snow, mud or sand, in hilly country where maximum traction on the road is a factor, no other tire tread yet devised is quite so effective, or so wholly approved by motoring opinion, as the U. S. Nobby Tread.

Its very simplicity—three rows of diagonal knobs, gripping the road—is the result of all the years of U. S. Rubber experience with every type of road the world over.

If every one listened to experience, how much they'd save

STOP and talk to the next man you see with U. S. Tires on his car. Ask him why.

Most likely you'll hear an interesting story about his tire experiments—before the answer was found. Money wasted. Promises unkept. Trouble on the road—humorous to every one except the man who went through it.

Finally U. S. Tires. And U. S. Tires ever since.

Perhaps it's the experience of U. S. Tire buyers that makes them more emphatic in their preference than ever this year.

When these men have tried most everything by the way of "staggering bargains", "hurrah discounts", "discontinued lines at less" and so forth they know what not to get.

They want a fresh, live tire. With a good reputation. That's everything it says it is. With the people behind it who back it up.

There are 92 U. S. Factory Branches.

Your local U. S. Dealer is drawing upon them continually to keep his stocks sized up, complete—to give you service.

Whenever he gets one or a hundred tires from a U. S. Factory Branch, they are newly made this season's tires.

Sold to you at a net price. Full values. Square-dealing. A reputable maker. A reputable dealer. The whole transaction as befits the leadership of the oldest and largest rubber organization in the world.

GOOD COOLING DRINKS FAR FROM THE SODA FOUNTAIN.

Almost any Fruit Juice in Season is Excellent in Beverages—Citrus Fruits, Give Zest to Other Flavors and Are Valuable for Children.

When there are only one or two lemons on hand, with a large, thirsty family demanding prompt refreshment, why not serve a "fruitade" made by combining different fruit juices with the lemon? A small amount of lemon is needed to intensify other fruit flavors, but almost any slightly acid fruit can be used as the basis for a good summer drink. It is a practical plan to keep one or two bottles of water cooling in the ice box to dilute fruit juices readily. Charged waters, such as apollinaris or ginger ale, help to convert a simple "fruitade" into a "punch" for occasions when a festive drink is appropriate, but the fruit juices, diluted with water only and well chilled, are very refreshing.

Special Fruitade Recipe Not Necessary.

A special recipe is not necessary to make a fruitade. Any single predominant flavor may give it its name: raspberry, grape, pineapple or orange; often four or five fruits are blended in approximately equal quantities. The flavor of peaches combines well with pear juice, pineapple, orange and lemon; the juice of blackberries, raspberries, currants, grapefruit, blackcaps, limes, and plums can be used in any selected combinations. Lemon is necessary (unless limes are used for the purpose) to make the drink sufficiently acid to quench the thirst on a hot day.

The amount of water added depends somewhat on the kinds of fruit used, and also on the preference of the "taster." A preponderance of very acid juices—lemon or lime—will stand more dilution than the milder flavors. In general one part of water to one of mixed fruit juice can be tried at first, and more water added if it seems desirable. Tea may be substituted for about one-third of the water if the punch is made for adults; if children are to have any, it is better to omit the tea. The individual taste must be the guide in sweetening.

Sugar should be added to fruit drinks in the form of sirup, to get the best effect, as well as to use it in the most economical way. Two parts of sirup to one of water should be simmered for five minutes and then cooled before adding to the other ingredients. Sugar sirup can be prepared for several days at a time, and kept bottled in the refrigerator; leftover fruit juices may also be boiled with sugar and kept in a cold place for short periods until one has enough on hand to make up a good fruitade.

A thin slice or two of orange and lemon, some chopped bits of pineapple with banana, a few colorful berries, invite attention to the bowl or pitcher of punch, and a sprig of mint both flavors and completes it. Professional caterers often include a slice of cucumber. When a fruit punch must be prepared for a large gathering of people—a dance, a social, or a picnic—it is helpful to have exact ingredients specified. About 40 persons can be served by the following recipe, which is recommended by the Experimental Kitchen, United States Department of Agriculture.

Fruit Punch.
1 can grated pineapple; 3 cups boiling water; 1 cup freshly made strong tea; juice of 6 lemons; juice of 10 oranges; ¼ teaspoon salt; 1 quart grape, currant, loganberry, raspberry, or strawberry juice; 2 pin bottles apollinaris or ginger ale; 2 pounds sugar boiled with 1 quart water for 5 minutes. Ice to cool.
Cook the pineapple for 20 minutes in the boiling water and strain. Cool and add the remaining fruit juices, the tea, and the cooled sirup. It is better to make the punch a few hours ahead and let it stand closely covered or ice to chill and open. At serving time, add the apollinaris, gingerale or water to dilute to the strength desired. Garnish with thin slices of fruit and mint leaves.

A Little Salt Intensifies Flavor.
It will be noticed that a little salt is called for in this punch. A "suspension" of salt, as the French say, intensifies the sweetness and the flavor of any fruit drink. Blackberry juice combined with lemon and a few grains of salt is recommended. Canned pineapple juice appeals to the whole family, but it needs a dash of lemon to give pungency. Orange juice is desirable in children's diet but it should not be limited to the children. There are many delicious drinks to be made with orange juice as a basis. The fresh oranges must of course be used. Commercial orange flavor will not answer the same purpose.
Grape juice may be canned at home for use in beverages. It is particularly refreshing combined with lime juice, and diluted with an equal amount of carbonated water. Loganberry juice, which has a fine flavor similar to raspberry, is commercially bottled in the West. The housewife who can get loganberries may well can some of this excellent fruit juice for home use. Nutrition specialists of the Department of Agriculture point out that fresh fruit drinks, especially those made from grape juice and the various citrus fruits, are important for children because they supply vitamins. A pitcher of orangeade or lemonade or grape punch, therefore, is not a mere gratification, but a real contribution to the day's food.

Mrs. Mahala Burns, Savanna, Mo., relates and experience, the like of which has happened in almost every neighborhood in this country, and has been told and related by thousands of others, as follow: "I used a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic and Diarrhoea Remedy about nine years ago and it cured me of flux (dysentery). I had another attack of the same complaint three or four years ago and a few doses of this remedy cured me. I have recommended it to dozens of people since I first used it and shall continue to do so for I know it is a quick and positive cure for bowel troubles." Advertisement.
